

Jazz Bag

By John Stoehr

Wednesday, October 21, 2009

---

The tune that got me grooving last week was "You Me Who" by the New Haven Improvisers Collective. It's part of a new eight-track disc that just came out, entitled Inflection.

Like the record's other tunes, "You Me Who" doesn't present itself right away. You have to wait for it to evolve. It appeals to a discrete fraternity — those with the patience and curiosity to let the music be.

Scattered shards of flute, electric guitar and saxophone hang in the ether until a strong beat is established somewhere in the bass. From there, this ensemble moves increasingly toward the outline of a faint hip-hop rhythm. Just when it feels fully formed, a wailing soprano (Anne Rhodes) cuts across the sky to blow it apart.

Nice work all round.